Warning: drug ads are harmful to your health

I have long felt that big drug companies are the real problem with health care. They push drugs on people to treat conditions that are relatively minor compared to the potential side effects. Even when you look at something as bad for you as smoking, the drugs they push to treat this often cause problems that are immediate and almost as bad as the long term problems caused by smoking.

This article brought to you by Natural News points out some of the problems that we really should be focusing on as a nation instead of figuring out how to force people to have health insurance. If we could stop drug companies from charging so much and pushing dangerous pills on us, the cost of health care would go way down and it would naturally become more readily available to those that don't have it.

Well that's all of my commentary. Check out the article at Natural News to get the whole story.
