

Published based on FDA Warns Five Electronic Cigarette Makers They're Breaking the Law

FDA Warns Five Electronic Cigarette Makers They're Breaking the Law

If you smoke you have probably heard of the electronic cigarettes that say they can help you stop smoking. But if you have tried one you probably have found out that they don't work like they are supposed to. The FDA has decided to make electronic cigarette makers tell the truth about how their products really work. Click on the link to find out more.

Five companies that make electronic cigarettes, which are marketed as a way to stop smoking, have been told they're breaking the law.

The Food and Drug Administration issued five e-cigarette distributors warning letters telling them they're violating federal law by claiming the products help smokers kick the habit.

FDA Warns Five Electronic Cigarette Makers They're Breaking the Law - AOL Health

You can also find this article published on FDA Warns Five Electronic Cigarette Makers They're Breaking the Law, and on the tag pages AOL, AOL health, cigarettes, electronic cigarettes, FDA.